Selby was a town of slate roofs and shut doors. Ilse found a room above a bakery and slept with the window open, the way she always had.

In the morning the baker’s daughter brought up bread and a newspaper three days old, and asked whether it was true that she kept a lighthouse.